Hopefully, the server seems magically faster today. It is about twice the machine it was yesterday, so we will see how it goes.

I also need to do some software upgrades so you might find it off late one night this week.

Is running super fast for me now (I have sigs turned off though :p)

Earlier in the week I gave up as it was taking minutes for pages to load. MUCH better now.

Full 15 minutes to open this window from hitting post reply. (Over an hour to get to hitting post reply from the link on the home page).Perhaps the hamsters were feeding on potty mouth and have now died. :(

It was good for a bit, then it got roool slow, then it had a DNS error, then took ages to load this page, now it seems a bit quicker....

Fingers crossed Luke....

although I am now mourning the loss of potty mouth, so I'd better go and deal with that..... :(

I'm not sure how much you can read into the time taken. I can remember seeing times taken of less than a second, when in fact it took over a minute.

I'm just thinking out loud here, but how much does something like Norton affect loading a thread with a lot of pics? I know this computer nearly ground to a halt with Norton on board, but with ditching that and changing to Google Chrome, which seems much quicker, with dial-up and lizzy turbocharger, I'm loading pages almost instantly, even with sigs turned on.

Hi there,
I found your forum this afternoon and have been having a great time reading through all the posts. Page loading was slow, but bearable, 6pm onwards - totally frustrating heaps of pages giving me loading errors. I have found that if I open pages using 'open in new tab' this has helped a little.

Think the hamsters might need some RedBull. 8)

OK.. works brilliantly in the morning/afternoon... terrible in the evening (7pm onwards).. always get the error page or the internal server page.
